AN EXCITING DAY AT SHARK FISHING

Hearing of the possibilities of good sport in shark fishing a crowd of Elks yesterday started for the briny deep to look a monster. A horse was secured, which it was understood dropped dead after hearing the result of Saturday's game, and tied to the stern of one of Young's launches. There were various other things taken along too which are sometimes found necessary and useful on a fishing trip. Among the fishermen who went were Beswick, Weston, Geo. Martin, Kennedy, Smith, Hartman, McKillop, Jim Gorman and Perine. As soon as the mouth of the harbor was reached and the launch commenced to pitch every one began to look for sharks. After a few moments of silence several became excited and leaned far over the side claiming that they saw fishes under the boat. Others went forward to keep an outlook seaward and found it necessary to lie down to balance themselves. In fact the crowd looked as though twenty runs had been scored against them, only they didn't care. In a short time it is said huge sharks appeared from every direction, the number of them varying, according to the fishermen's statements, from none to fifteen. However things became exciting and those who felt strong enough to hold harpoons made some frantic jabs and at last Gorman pricked a monster in the side. The excitement was intense for a while but was suddenly brought to a climax when Gorman and Weston fell overboard among the raging denizens of the deep. Immediately harpoons flew in a cloud, every man feeling that it was his duty to throw at least five in any one direction. Hammers, pails, bottles and baskets followed. Gorman wasted no time but stole his home base followed in half a second by Weston. No twenty foot sharks were secured though it is understood that there were dozens to be had for the hooking. Soon afterwards the crowd decided that as they didn't care to eat or to fish, or to sail, they had better throw up their job and come back to firm soil. A landing was quickly made and the crowd took hacks and went home.
